As someone who lives in Israel, I am troubled by this. Reports like this seem to always make their way to the head lines, becoming the basis for everyone's opinion about Israel and Israelis.

The first thing you should know about Israel is that nearly all of the people here are quite liberal and in favor of peace. We interact with Arabs every day, and it is no different than interacting with anyone else. There is no distrust or animosity between every day people.

The second thing to know is that ultra orthodox Jews are FUCKING INSANE. EVERYONE in Israel HATES the ultra orthodox, they are easily comparable to neo-conservative Christians in their fundamentalism, and even extremist Muslims. They are the scourge of Israel and as much a detriment to peace as the terrorists.

So, next time you hear a story like this, I hope you will see it as an isolated case from lunatics rather than a generalization of Israelis as a whole. Israelis are good people, and I am sad that these incidents and cowards have come to represent them.

I think people as a whole support the wall, and they have good reason to. Since its construction there have been ZERO terrorist attacks inside Israel, that means NO bombs in cafes, NO bombs in buses, NO bombs in shopping malls. Compared to a time before its construction when bombs were a monthly, sometimes weekly, incident. This was a scary time, and deeply affected everyone. When you live in these conditions, your safety and comfort comes before outsiders, and because Israel had the power to protect itself, it did. This is a natural reaction from any country, or even organism, to protect itself when under threat, even if its makes others outside suffer. That being said, there are many check-points and regulations that could be pulled back, but you must understand the paranoia and the relief that came with this wall.

The loyalty oath is a fucking joke proposed by some nut-job tyrant named Lieberman. I will explain this. Someone asked me where the liberal Israelis are? Well, in the last election the Liberal party WON the majority of the popular vote...

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Israeli_legislative_election,_2009#Results

It was unfortunate, however, that the ULTRA FASCIST party, headed by this nut job LIEBERMAN, was able to make a coalition with our current prime minister, and head of the Likud party (Conservative), Netenyahu.

Lieberman (who is now our minister of foreign affairs) is an absolute nut-fuck tyrant, and this loyalty oath is his brain child. It is only being seriously considered now by Netenyahu because he wants to throw him a bone so that he may have a chance of proceeding with peace talks.

About settlers, I like I think that at least 40% of the well educated and moderately liberal population is opposed to the settlements, and the ignorant 30% just don't know or understand what is happening, and the rest, insane, or misguided.

The difference between silver and diamond is also comfort with hotkeys and control groups, you must have this down. Once you play a lot you will get a feeling for timings, scouting, anticipating, countering, etc.

Never play to cheese, ever, if you want to improve. Always play to watch and prevent cheese, to guard against it, to constantly gather as much info on your opponent as you can and to build AGAINST him rather than build blindly for him to counter you.

I think what is interesting to note from the Drake equation is the fact that life sprung relatively quickly in Earth's history -- Almost from the moment that the surface was habitable. So they draw from this observation that, given the correct environment, life may in fact be very likely to evolve.

We have yet to explore Mars, which we all hope will yield some amazing finds. Another possibility for life is on the satellite of Titan, yet still, you under-estimate the number of solar systems in the galaxy. And further, galaxies in the universe -- Based on what we CAN observe, from the micro to the macro, patterns always repeat themselves. It seems a fair estimation that if something has happened once, any where, at any time, it is almost certain to happen again. I can't imagine it being likely, based on the amount of stars, solar systems and galaxies in the universe, that life has not evolved somewhere else out there -- In fact, it almost seems silly to assume so. There is of course no evidence, but claiming there is no life in space is like taking one step into the ocean, dunking a cup into the water, and saying there isn't a fish in this cup therefore there is no life in the ocean.

As someone said before, the fact that life exist on Earth proves one thing for sure: that the probability of life evolving is greater than 0. Putting the notion aside that the universe/multiverse is infinite, and assuming that it is just unfathomably large -- I think it is more correct to assume that there is life elsewhere, than to assume not. But of course, we cannot know. I speak only from a perspective of probability.

As an example, if Earth was the only planet with life on it in the universe, the probability of that would be something like 1 in 10^1000000000000000, something absurdly minute -- You are more likely to be struck by lightning 20 times and win the lottery 20 times in the same year. It just seems far more likely that if life is possible here on Earth, and that it developed relatively quickly, then it's probability is gotta be a lot higher than that, no?

Palestinian basically just means an Arab who is born in the region that is now Israel. There are many Palestinians that live in Israel with full citizenship.

First, don't show me videos of these insane Zionist settlers that everyone in Israel hates -- I could equally post a video of some rabid terrorist wishing another holocaust upon Israel. So what?

When you ask me if I know who expelled the Palestinians from their land and into refugee camps, I assume you mean Israel? Please share with me your erudite knowledge of the history, with some citations please so that I may educate myself.

"In the January 2006 Palestinian parliamentary elections Hamas won a decisive majority in the Palestinian Parliament, [17] defeating the PLO-affiliated Fatah party. Following the elections, the United States and the EU halted financial assistance to the Hamas-led administration."

I guess it doesn't matter that Hamas was democratically elected. Sure, Israel should funnel supplies to a government that confiscates any aid to use at their sole digression. And, whenever possible, to use it to make weapons against Israel.

Truly, I don't deny that things could and should be better in Gaza. I wish Israel did more to help, and eased the blockade. But, you fail to see it from Israel's perspective, who have been traumatized by war and terror since its inception. You also refuse to acknowledge that the plight of Gaza is not entirely on the shoulders of Israel. Do you recognize Israel's right to exist?

Palestinians are not treated as sub humans, why don't you come to Israel, instead of repeating talking points that honestly, you really seem to know nothing about...There are reasons for what the Israelis do that are more complexed than what you may see as genocide or hate, come to Israel, talk to an Israeli. You have no first hand experience, and no knowledge. Talking points. Come to Israel and talk to a Palestinian, for that matter.

Palestinians living in Israel are not shot and killed in the street, they are not harassed, abused, etc, they are integrated into society on almost every level. I live in Tel Aviv, I live in an Arab neighborhood, all of the shops in my neighborhood are owned by Palestinians. I work with and live next to Arabs, Palestinians. I have Palestinians friends -- There are laws that discriminate against them, yes, and I do not like that, and I want it to stop -- But try and see the reason for why Israel does it, and it may be the start of understanding that can actually solve the problem. But like you said, someone in bronze or silver, just isn't good enough to compete. They don't have enough APM, they don't have an understanding of the game, they don't have a build -- I mean, in one way its like comparing a chess master to a chess novice, obviously the novice has no chance. Neural parasite is practically broken at this point. For one, tanks out range NP which makes it pretty much useless against terran, and stalkers have blink which pretty much makes it useless against protoss. Infested terran is useful in very select circumstance. Fungal is useful against Terran until they get medivacs at which point it is mostly only used as a means to slow down your enemy's army, something that t1 sentries are better at. Overall I'd say it is easily the worst spell caster in the game, compared with ghosts/raven, sentry/high templar.

On the other hand, you can also morph into a fortified structure that does massive AOE damage and is extremely effective against all ground units and can also be massively healed, so by this token, it provides free limitless scouting, and an extremely effective fortified defense. Problem?

Because of things like wall-ins Protoss and Terran have a considerable advantages when it comes to creative play--they are able to safety tech up and pull off these creative styles, while zerg is stuck in the reaction zone. It is too risky to tech up with zerg because we have no means to wall off or siege defense, and it is impossible for us to get into the enemy base without air. Zerg also gets horribly out-mined on 1 base against both Terran and Protoss. So the inevitable consequence of this is that Zerg takes 2nd base and has to react to whatever pressure the Terran or Protoss is planning behind their walls.

Top zerg players are playing 12 hours a day every day trying to mull these ideas over, there are many creative and outside the box players such as Catz, and previous TLO who is known for this creative play (who later quit zerg without showing us anything really interesting). In the end, you don't see these things because, well, its just not effective. There are situations when you see these scenarios playing out, in certain circumstances, but they are not something you can plan going into a game. Zerg needs macro hard and react, or they lose, unfortunately it is really that simple.

Are you using hotkeys to make sure you are doing everything as quickly as possible? Are you using control groups? For example, setting all of your barracks to a control group, say 3, so you can just press 3 and then "a" or whatever hotkey it is to make marines?

Are you spending your money? Do you often end up with 1000+ minerals before like 10 minutes in the game? Make more barracks, and add them all to the same hotkey, and just press 3 and then "a" to make mass marines!

Do you put your army on hotkey? The same applies, put your marines on the "1" group control, and then just push 1 and there ya go your whole army is there. Once more marines come out of the barrack you can easily add them by selecting them at hitting "shift +1" which adds them to the control group.

You can also select all of the same unit by holding ctrl and clicking a unit.

Maybe these are the missing piece of the puzzle for you, not sure, since no body ever talks about these things because they think it is so obvious.

Basically if you are making scvs, making depots, and making barracks, you should be ok in bronze league. So just try to get used to using hotkeys and control groups.

There is also a setting in the "gameplay" tab in options to put "show hotkey in control window" you should definitely click that on, because it will show you on the bottom right what all the hotkeys are for all the production abilities.

For example, right now, just read the front page of haaretz.

"Barak: Israel must advance peace or face a 'diplomatic tsunami' Defense Minister says Israel must counter building international pressure to recognize a Palestinian state within 1967 borders."

I don't really feel like explaining it anymore, I've tried many times, but no one really wants to hear or care...They just want to say "Fuck Israel," and everyone circle jerks.

I see you are genuinely interested in finding out more, I don't really know any good resources, but visiting is always a good place to begin. I've read a lot of polls similar to the one you posted, I'm sure you could find something with a little research on the internet.

It depends on your race, zerg is the only race with tricky scouting, imo. With terran scans are basically your answer for checking inner base tech, but it is always wise to spread some marines around the map, on towers, at potential expos, and outside your enemies base.

With protoss, observer, obviously. With observes you shouldn't have too much trouble with scouting, make 2-3, and put them in key locations.

With zerg, like terran, it is crucial to put zerglings in key locations around the map. Put 3-5 outside their ramp and keep poking up the ramp, a lot can be revealed from this simple maneuver. It is also important to send overlords into key positions at the beginning of the game, ideally one on either side of their base, so when the time comes you can sacrifice an overlord to get that key information.

Other than that, you should probably send out a harvester around 12-14 supply despite what race you play to see what their early game build is like.

Other than that, it isn't complicated really. It just requires presence of mind and apm to constantly scout. It is also important to keep in mind key timings to scout, for example usually around 7 minutes game time your opponent will be choosing their tech, things like this. But generally you will want to feel out your opponent from the beginning, and if you feel uncertain about their intentions, time to get in their base and get that scout.

Knowing WHAT exactly things mean I think can be learned from playing a lot and observing pro games. But a general rule of thumb I guess is that you want to watch for gas, are they getting early gas, or no gas? This is the biggest tell, obviously if you see early gas, it means they are going for tech, if you see no gas, it means that they are going to be expanding or putting some early pressure on you. It can be a combination of both of course, and these kinds of game sense come with a lot of experience.

I also play zerg, I'm on EU if you want, you can hit me up ggnewbz.420 is my account.

Obviously what you DON'T want to do is send your OL straight into their base for it to die, losing an early overlord is not good, later in the game, it becomes less important.

For example at the start of every game I send my overlord out to the side of their base, outside, so it is position later on to go take a peak inside. When I play a 4 player map I just guess and send it out, and use my 12 drones to scout location, and then move it accordingly.

Again, you want to avoid losing lings if possible, but you gotta know what's coming at you, especially as zerg. As soon as your pool finishes make 4-6 lings only, and continue to drone. Send 1 to key xel naga towers, and the rest to his ramp to poke up and see what is there. After that put them on hold position at the bottom of his ramp so you can see when and iwth what he is moving out, keep them on hotkey and always keep an eye on them on the mini map so they dont all get slaughtered by accident. Keep tabbing over to them and poking up that ramp!

But ya know, silver league, scouting probably isn't your biggest problem, just keep practicing, you'll get it.

Secondly, all things considered, it is very difficult for a Zerg to beat a protoss in a straight late game battle. For this reason the Zerg v Protoss meta game has been changing a bit, including things like constant roach drops into the base to pick off probes, etc.

Also, don't count out the mutalisk, which is one of the most under used units in pvz. If they are going mass gateway units muta will fail, if they are turtling to get that deathball, however, mutalisk is AMAZING! Just remember to set up a nice spine crawler defense to prevent any sudden push from killing you, don't be afraid to throw down 10-20 spines in the late game.

Ok, I used to have a lot of problems with this, but now I find it extremely easy to defend. First of all, you want to scout at around 12 and see if they are double barracking. If you see this you can be sure they are bunker rushing. If not however, you should still be ready.

What I like to do is not just put my overlord at my natural but way ahead below the ramp so you are guaranteed to see it coming early enough.

A lot of people say "just play it safe." I've found this is the opposite of what to do. TAKE IT SERIOUSLY, because if that bunker goes up you will be at a game losing deficit. When you see 2 scvs, a marine, or that first bunker going down, pull AT LEAST 6 drones, I think 8 is safe -- my philosophy is better to be safe than sorry. Once you bring your drones down send 3 to attack first marine and at least 2 killing the scv building the bunker. That's it! It's so worth it to pull a bunch of drones to make sure that it doesn't go down. And when it fails you are put in a very nice spot even though you lost a lot of mining time.

In summary, better safe than sorry ALWAYS. Good luck!

Great gif, really funny. I have a strange memory, when I was a kid, maybe about 8, I was walking around the house naked and our family dog started sniffing my dick. Well I thought itd be funny to put peanut butter all over my dick and butthole and let him lick it off. It was pretty cool until he decided to bite my dick, and my parents came running in and I was sitting there with my dick bleeding covered in peanut butter. Something about this little man being raped recalled this memory. I still have a giant scar that runs down my johnson to my coinsack.

Once I was at the park with my Grandma'ma and we were walking over a little river with a stone walk way. Well she was feeling chipper this day because she decided she wanted to leap over one of the stones. Well she slipped much like this guy, except her body was too frail to handle the fall. She broke her hip and her head just sat back in the water because she couldn't sit up. I run to pick her up, but it was too late, she drowned.

Sometimes now I take my kids through the same park, and something comes over me. I force their head into the water to recreate the scene with my Grandma and I hold their faces until they almost drown and then take them out. Part of me feels that I'm trying to relive that memory and save her, and I'm afraid that one day I will drown my children too.

Thanks for the gif.

The ideal strategy for zerg is basically to max before your opponent. You should have a giant economy (as many bases as you can take, and definitely more than 3), and at this point in the game you should basically be throwing your army at your opponent while trying to be as cost effective as possible. Remax your army, and reswarm, that's the ideal way to play zerg. The main reason being for this is that terran and protoss max armies are MUCH scarier, so you need to chip them away with your less cost-effective army, and remax sooner. This is especially true with Protoss, you want to take every opportunity to trade armies with Protoss.

About taking more than 3 bases, you dont actually need to saturate more than 3 bases, but you definitely want the gas on the additional bases, then when your minerals run out on one of your older bases you can simply transfer all your drones to one of your other hatcheries.

A few points also do not make sense, for example, how can his wife with a history of extreme mental instability rival him for custody? I mean I know the US courts are biased towards females but this is a pretty extreme case. Besides that, if I read correctly, she is texting him pictures of her sucking dude's dicks in club bathrooms? That, sir, is damning evidence.

Assuming the story is true, which I don't, the guy is obviously an alcoholic, and it is not exactly clear why he lost his job.

"Combine this to falling stocks, falling house value, lower-paid job, and all the money I wasted drinking and 'some other things I'm not allowed to mention if I ever want a chance at getting custody again'."

What?? What does that even mean, and why would you say that?

I'm shitting myself right now that people are so willing to give this man money, without any proper evidence. Seriously - DO NOT GIVE THIS MAN MONEY.

One of the primary differences between OCD and Tourette Syndrome is the presents of a vocal tick, that can include something as mild as clearing one's throat.

Wiki has a great page about it, it can probably better inform you than I, but basically, most people who have Tourette's live a perfectly normal life, most people don't even notice I have it.

Why are you stacking resist all? If you are using force armor, you only get three hits anyway, granted that you have enough HP (I think you should have at least 30k and better to be nearer 40k) But you should not sacrifice DPS for resist all, doesn't make sense. Also, knowing how to play act 2 and beyond makes all the difference, you just need to use hydra, blizzard, and movement speed boots.

It's all about your damage mitigation, so whether you have 50k hp or 30khp, it doesnt really matter, since your health is mostly being replenished through LoH and skills, potions, whatever. the 20khp doesnt make a difference really.

Attack speed is going to increase your effective hp by WAY more than 20khp, more like by 100,000's..

Also if you even read the article you cited, the reason is for poor sanitation and no oversight.

"The Ministry of Agriculture's recent interest in pig farms claims to be singularly focused on the poor environmental and health conditions. It is certainly true that the farms of the North in the towns of Ibilin, Mailya, Kafr Yasif, and Nazareth are crowded and unsanitary, a fact that I corroborated by personally driving through Ibilin nearly four years ago. As much as I tried, I could not escape the noxious smell of pig excrement, even with the windows rolled up."

I used to love Starcraft 2, I used to play it hours every day after work, and sit around the computer every weekend to watch whatever tournament was on.

I also loved Broodwar and Warcraft 3.

Warcraft with all of the stats and weekly tournaments was a thing of beauty. Not to mention the custom scene which frankly is what I spent 90% of my time on.

I was absolutely amazed when Starcraft 2 came out that battle.net 2.0 was actually WORSE than the wc3 battle.net. I was reminded of this every few months when I would check the custom scene for a new and interesting map, only to find the same shitty stale maps dominating the scene.

Then my friend gave me an invite to Dota 2. WOW. This game's interface is fucking amazing. Just spending an hour there I could feel the quality and innovation. Quality just seeps through the pores of Dota 2 and I know that this game is going to be GREAT. I had a revelation that felt like "this is the future of gaming. This is what it feels like." Starcraft 2 is a reactionary game, not only does it add NOTHING new to the scene, it actually takes many strides backwards.

I used to love Starcraft 2, but I can see that Blizzard just doesn't give a fuck about it.

On Inside the Game they talk about Starcraft like no one will leave it for Moba. As someone who loved Starcraft 2, I can personally say that I left Starcraft 2 for a Dota 2. It is a better game, despite genre. It is a game that the developers care about, and finally it bears the name of Valve, a company which still commands my respect.

And as Starcraft 2 suffers a slow and inevitable death, I will watch quietly from the sideline, taking sadistic pleasure in its demise. Because fuck Blizzard, and fuck the Blizzard apologists who refuse to acknowledge the fatal shortcomings that will surely destroy this community.

Starcraft 2 had the potential to be so much more. It's a god damned shame.

See you on Dota.

One comment I will offer is that I couldn't understand what the 2nd guy says at the end, even after watching twice.

Man, I have some questions for you as someone who just started in the youtube game, I really hope you don't mind taking a few minutes to answer, that would really make my day.

First how did you first start to find an audience? Is there a certain community, you have a shit load of friends, or just naturally people discovering you on youtube? I've always wondered how people with thousands of subscribes started.

It looks like you have actual film experience, did you study film making in school or self taught?

Do you use expensive equipment? Everything looks so good, would you say it is more a result of post-productions or quality equipment?

What are your biggest challenges, especially when you started and realized you wanted to do the "youtube thing".

Anyway here is one of my videos that people seem to like, I think my stuff is a little too weird or low-budget to appeal to a mass audience. Although I'm still open to the possibility that I'm not funny, too.

Yep, sometimes its hard to see outside your own head when you create something like this. I was just jiving on the song "It's a beautiful morning" But said instead, "I think I'll stay inside for a while." If you aren't familiar with the song, I guess the joke is lost. Thanks for your comment :).

Look, it's my channel, and it's one of the only ways I can get original views. I didn't realize I was causing you problems, and I apologize for that. But this was original content, if you watch it, not just the end, you'll see that.

Sorry that you think my videos are shit, but I have had several of them exceed 100 points and it has really helped to grow my channel. Obviously some people in this subreddit like them, even if they go against your comedic sense.

I, will however, promise to stop reposting.

But I would ask you to reconsider your removing of this post, as I really believe it is original content.

You really can't tell the difference between the original and this re-edit? It's a different joke, a different video, it has a different meaning. That's like saying a hip hop song taking from a motown classic is not original.
